

The properties of steel are known and consistent and conform to Australian Standards or their equivalent. Steel-framing components are designed around those properties. Most modern system, use high tensile steel components and appropriate jointing methods, and are engineered to pass strict performance tests.