

Yes. Additions are relatively simple and present no problems. Furthermore the original steel structure will be straight and true regardless of its age, making the job of lining up the extension easier than for conventional timber framing.