

Yes. Steel frames are safe because they are earthed and it is a requirement that all new housing be fitted with circuit breaking safety devices, so there is little chance of touching anything live. A broken or pierced wire in a timber frame can remain live and leaking current can cause troublesome faults and a fire risk.